

Hopkins v. Hosemann—Complaint Highlights

Approximately 60% of Mississippians banned for life from voting have completed their sentences.

Approximately 60% of Mississippians banned for life from voting have completed their sentences. Of the individuals who have completed their sentences are also black. Of the individuals who have completed all aspects of their sentences for convictions between 1994 and 2017, approximately 58% are black and 37% are white.

Of the individuals who have completed all aspects of their sentences for convictions between 1994 and 2017, approximately 58% are black and 37% are white.

There are only two ways for a disenfranchised citizen to get his or her right to vote back: (1) by completing a sentence for a crime that carries a disenfranchising penalty, and (2) by completing a sentence for a crime that carries a disenfranchising penalty.

